We have some exciting news to share!

- South Africa has finally lifted all travel bans, scrapped our red list and we open for business. All visitors need to present a negative PCR result and all the airports have put in some stringent COVID protocols which is all expected and necessary.
- South Africa is open to tourism, effective immediately, whether you hail from India, USA, Middle East or any other country! The move is a much-needed reopening for a beleaguered industry left reeling by the impact of lockdown and the muddled reopening of international tourism which has confused overseas travellers.
- The announcement by President Cyril Ramaphosa last night and subsequent release of gazetted regulations allowing inbound international tourism from all countries provided the requirement of a negative PCR certificate gives the tourism industry the certainty it needs to start recovering lost ground.
- While many competitor destinations will remain closed for the foreseeable future, tourism in South Africa has been given the green light to operate in full with stringent health and hygiene protocols in place to safeguard the wellbeing of staff and guests. "After a tough year, consumers are looking for ways to escape and reconnect meaningfully with others.
- We are looking forward to welcoming you to South Africa, and we ensure you total safety and comfort, at all times!-Cindy Pereira(Managing Director)
